Identity theft is one of the fastest growing crimes in America. Identity thieves open new accounts in other peoples' names and rack up debts on existing accounts, using consumers' Social Security numbers, bank account information, or addresses. All too often identity theft victims may spend years – and large sums of money – restoring their credit histories and their good names.

To combat this growing crime Congresswoman Matsui has co-sponsored various bills that will give consumers increased protections, force businesses to increase the security they give to your personal data and stiffen penalties to those convicted of data theft. These bills include H.R. 1078, which if passed will establish strict criminal penalties for those unlawfully buying and selling Social Security numbers.
